HUNTING FOR PEDIGREES.

Profitable Business in Which a Young New Yorker Is Engaged.

Troy Times. the business of searching out pedigrees and who apply. He styleshimself a "pursuivant This is not exactly a new vocation, for there are many geneaologists in this country who earn considerable money by tracing out the ancestry of families. But this young "pursulvant of arms" is not, properly speaking, a genealogist. The preparation of family trees is no part of his business. He relies solely upon patrons who have but one which they may have emblazoned on their note paper and cut upon their seal rings. For all such there is always a chance for se curing the coveted prize. Coats-of-arms are early as plentiful as lamp-posts. Books of heraidry give the names of thousands of families entitled to arms, and a description of the device accorded to each. If the manhas he is almost sure of finding that name in one of the heraldic books. It does no ollow that he is entitled to the arms of the family of his name, but a small matter like this never worrise the crest-hunters.
